

Old wine cellar

Not far from the small cove on the north side of the island, the remains of a stone foundation are being overtaken by bushes and trees. At a number of times through history, small villages have existed on Nomans Land Island. Most often, they were seasonal fishing villages, but there were year-round inhabitants during the early 1900s. This foundation is believed to be a wine cellar that was used by villagers during that time.